How To Save Hundreds Of Dollars On Your Next Hot Water Bill...

Let's not sugar-coat the cold, hard truth...

The electricity companies are robbing us all blind.

And with the Australian Government's new carbon tax on the way, our electricity bills are only going to keep going up... despite budgets all over the country already stretched to breaking point.

In fact, if you're like the average Aussie household, a significant portion of your electricity bill comes from heating your hot water – most of which isn't even used before it cools down again. What a waste of money!

But don't worry...there is a solution.

Yes... You Can Stop Throwing Away Your Hard-Earned Wages...

And no - I'm not talking about LPG (Liquid Petroleum Gas), which is almost as expensive as electricity (even before you factor in the crazy installation price), just as bad for the environment, and dumps an unsightly gas tank right on your front lawn...

Nor am I talking about the Australian Government's latest darling, solar energy. Because as much as the Australian Government would love you to spend at least $6 000 (with no available rebate) on a renewable energy source... solar technology isn't anywhere near the stage of being a cost-effective alternative, taking between 5 and 8 years before the average household breaks even.

In fact, solar energy is so expensive the Government has had to ban the old-style 'hot water heaters' from January, 2012 in a desperate bid to make hard-working Aussie families sink money into this overpriced (and underpowered!) technology.

Australia needs a solution...

A method of heating hot water that's easy to install, efficient, and cost-effective.

And as of now... that solution has arrived.
